There were many obstacles to the development of commerce in the Middle Ages. Dangers by land and sea had to be considered by the merchant who wished to send his goods to some distant part; but as the towns grew and multiplied, the resolution and ingenuity of man rendered it possible for commerce to increase steadily, till by the dawn of the modern period every country in Western Europe had felt its beneficent influence.

When we think of the poorness of communication, the vast forests, the inferior roads, the unbridged rivers, and the innumerable foes lining the trade routes, it would seem, at first sight, almost an impossibility in the north of Europe to have intercourse with those of the south.

Then, again, the narrow spirit of the Middle Ages, the survival of feudalism, offered a difficulty which was almost as prohibitive to the transportation of merchandise as the robbers and pirates, noble and ignoble, who lay in wait for the trembling merchant. There was an elaborate system of dues and tolls which made most goods when they arrived safely at their destination a luxury beyond the means of the average man; and, furthermore, it was the practice of governments in those days to prohibit and prevent passage through their countries.

Yet in spite of all difficulties the groups of towns which were developing in Northern and Southern Europe, and the manufacturing centres of the East and West, steadily increased their wealth and prosperity.

7. Listening is one of the four skills in communication. List the other three and explain why each of the four skills is valuable to you as a student. (20 marks)
